Expressive Language and Comprehension:

Books are a great way to elicit expressive language and comprehension in children. The important thing to remember when reading books with your child is to ask OPEN ENDED questions. This takes some practice but the best way to help children talk more is to ask them a question where they generate their own answers. For example, “what is she doing?” “How is he feeling?” “What’s happening in this picture?” These are open ended questions versus yes or no questions or questions with one word answers.
