

DON'T BLAME THE FISH

Dialexis, Inc.

1-800-98-PROFIT

www.dialexis.com

DON'T BLAME THE FISH The Importance Of Value Statements

David Hibbard
Managing Partner, Dialexis, Inc.
Co-Author of SOAR Selling

When I was a young boy, I lived near a river in a small town outside of Chicago. The river was an exciting place to go to for any kid because there were turtles, bridges to cross and of course fish to catch. I used to love to go fishing in that river because it was challenging to see if I could catch a fish. If I did I would proudly take it home to show my Mom! The problem is; I didn't always bring home a fish because sometimes the fish just weren't biting. No matter what I did they wouldn't bite. I would try everything, change my bait, change spots, wiggle the pole, hide behind a bush in case they could see me or whatever....still no bites. It was frustrating because I was convinced I was good at fishing. After a long day and with my 'stringer' empty, I remember reeling in my line while saying..."stupid fish!"

Now, here I am in a high level selling career and yes I'm still fishing, but of course a little differently. Today I fish for new clients that I can share my passion with. I'm supporting organizations that are interested in building top line revenue! Often times I end up on calls where I have a chance to present my proposition and by the end of the call the client may say "NO." It's a reminder again that the fish don't always bite. Again, it's frustrating because I think I'm great at selling and have an amazing revenue driving solution.

The other day I was on a call with a new prospect, I asked questions and listened, the prospect asked questions and listened. I believed the call was going pretty well since I thought I delivered my proposition with clarity and professionalism, then the client said NO! At first I thought....NO! Are you kidding!?! I couldn't believe it; I think I did a great job and the prospect still says NO! What's wrong with this guy? Then it hit me. As much as I wanted to blame the client for "not getting it", I remembered my fishing experience. If the prospects aren't 'biting' I get to look at my offer rather than hang up and blame the client.

If you're in sales and you prospect regularly, here are a few thoughts that may help you take responsibility for the results you're generating from your value statement or strategy. Rather than blame the prospect (the fish so to speak) you get to look at your value proposition and how it was delivered.

Here are a few considerations that may sharpen your selling skills and ultimately your results:

1. RETHINK YOUR VALUE STATEMENT

Like me, you probably feel your value statement is excellent. Most salespeople do. I have no doubt that you spent time developing it, your training department may have directed you and ultimately your sales manager weighed in on what you should say. So when you deliver it on one of your prospecting calls it should go over pretty big, Right? Remember this; it's the fish you're trying to create interest with, not someone in your company. Just because YOU believe your value statement is compelling, doesn't mean the prospect does.

2. FISH BITE ON WHAT THEY ARE INTERESTED IN – NOT WHAT YOU ARE INTERESTED IN:

So it's simple, all you have to do is figure out what the prospect is interested in, determine if your organization offers a solution that aligns with the client's interest and there you have it! In order to understand what CEO's are interested in you simply have to look for clues and those clues are on every firm's website.

The formula for finding the clues for large enterprise accounts is

$$\mathbf{R + CI + C + D = VP}$$

Research + Corporate Initiative + Connectors + Differentiator
=Your Value Proposition

Take a look on the website of a company under “about us”, then look at “leadership team”, then click on President/CEO and then search for “Annual Report” or “letter from the President.” This will lead you to the firm's Corporate Initiative. Tip: The Presidents Corporate Initiative is not the same as the organization's Mission Statement. They are significantly different. The Corporate Initiative is what the President is focused on NOW. It may be to increase revenue in a vertical industry or enter the market with an entirely new product. Either way, once you discover the Corporate Initiative you can then determine if your firm or you have a differentiator that can support your prospect to achieve their objectives.

3. YOUR DELIVERY

Mechanics is one thing, but how you deliver your message is another. Remember when I said I was fishing and sometimes I had to ‘wiggle the pole’ to entice the fish? It wasn’t just the bait I had on the line, it was the presentation of the bait and the same holds true when delivering your message to your prospect. Prospects may respond to your proposition with a resounding NO because your offer wasn’t interesting or the way you delivered your offer didn’t resonate.

4. SMALLER CLIENTS

To discover what smaller companies are interested in (B2B) you have to understand fundamental B2B pain. Their situation may be quite different than that of the enterprise account. You may not find their corporate initiative on their website; instead you can look for “indicators” of corporate initiative or vision. As a common denominator, you can make a fair assumption that most small firms are focused on ‘cash flow’. It’s a common pain point. As a result, you can determine what your firm offers that will help your prospect generate top line revenue.

The formula for smaller companies is:

$$\text{CP} + \text{D} = \text{VP}$$

Client Pain + Your Differentiator
= Your Value Proposition

5. TAKE RESPONSIBILITY

It's not always easy, but if you can learn to accept 100% responsibility for generating a NO on your prospecting calls then you will have an excellent base from which to be introspective. By accepting responsibility (not blame) for the NO's you get, you'll be able to move from frustration to creation. Every new prospecting call that didn't go the way you wanted it to will provide you with the opportunity to re-tool your offer. You move from blame to gain and how great is that!

Authors note

This article is not intended to denigrate selling by referring to prospects as 'fish' or a salesperson's value statement as 'bait.'

I respect selling and simply wanted to share an analogy.

Dialexis, Inc. is a Sales Training and Leadership Coaching Organization with Offices in the United States and Canada.

For more information regarding our services including:

SOAR SELLING
THE CANOE THEORY
KEYNOTE SPEAKING
AFFILIATE PARTNERSHIPS

Contact Us at:
www.dialexis.com
1-800-98-PROFIT

SellingPower®

Top 20 Sales Training Companies

2017