Hutchison Group Invited to Present at Boeing's Labor Relations Conference

May 24, 2004 - It was announced today that Cameron Hutchison, president and founder of Hutchison Group, Inc. has been invited to present at The Boeing Company's annual Labor Relations Conference. The conference is scheduled to be held in June at Boeing's Leadership Center in St. Louis, Missouri.

The Boeing Company's Director of Labor Relations, John Messman, described the conference. "Each year we bring together labor relations professionals from across Boeing for a conference to discuss issues pertinent to our current and future business outlook, and invite presentations from external experts to speak on special topics of interest. Our senior management team believes the labor relations issues associated with acquisitions and divestitures represents an important and timely topic. Having worked with Mr. Hutchison over the years, we regard him as a true expert in this field and are very pleased that he will be sharing his experience and insights with us at this year's conference."

Commenting on his upcoming presentation, Hutchison said, "Events such as mergers and acquisitions represent an important and unique opportunity for the company, union officials, and employees to carefully examine their business and to institute important changes which will help ensure the operation's long-term viability. At a time when many businesses are too quick to close operations or push work off shore, it is refreshing to see companies like Boeing and their union officials working together to provide responsible leadership, and looking for ways to institute meaningful change in a spirit of fairness and openness."

Founded in 1996, the Hutchison Group is an independent management-consulting firm, highly regarded for their ability to develop and implement innovative win-win labor-cost strategies during mergers, acquisitions, divestitures, and other business restructuring.
