Markets continue to be strong this week with lean inventories still the norm at the street level. Mills in the north are struggling to move loads as rail service in Canada is now crawling at a snail's pace. One large OSB mill in BC declared "horse manure"... errr "force majeure" and in effect cancelled all 2022 contracts based on lack of cars coming from the CN railroad. This of course caused an already hot OSB market to get even hotter, dragging plywood along for the ride. Established "print" levels are well below what must be paid for prompt trucks. Futures softened this week, but you still can't really find much, so high prices continue to rule the day.
