

I Think We Should See Other People

We're Planting a Church!

9/27/2020

If you are planting a church in Helena in the Fall of 2020, how does that look differently than when you originally planted Narrate?

So what do you think about loving to serve others at your job, but also love it for yourself?

In our culture our spouse is supposed to be "everything we need", where we feel we shouldn't need other relationships, but is that a true statement?

What's your current vision for the next few months at Narrate?

What part of Narrate that we gained in the past decade is most going to help sustain it in the coming months?

How are we supposed to approach this "starting over" and attempt a new relationship, whatever that new dynamic is?

As you consider this like a church planting time, are you convinced that the recently created social order is how we'll be living in 2021 and beyond?

What is the value of making connections with small groups in moving forward?

What vocational refinement has happened for you this season as leaders at Narrate?

Do we let our family suffer at the expense of how we respond to God?

What is the difference between reacting and responding?

Now that we are a church plant again, how do we do amalgamate and caffeinated again during COVID?
